

The Journal of Premier Research typically employs Creative Commons licenses to govern the distribution and use of published content. Creative Commons licenses provide a standardized framework for specifying the permissions and restrictions associated with copyrighted material, allowing authors to retain certain rights while granting others permissions to use, share, and adapt their work. Here's an overview of the types of Creative Commons licenses commonly used by the Journal of Premier Research and the associated author rights and permissions:

1. CC-BY (Attribution):

- This license allows others to distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon the work, even commercially, as long as they credit the author(s) for the original creation.
- Authors retain copyright ownership of their work and grant others permission to use and redistribute it under the terms specified by the CC-BY license.
- Users are required to provide proper attribution to the original author(s) when sharing or adapting the work.

2. CC-BY-SA (Attribution-ShareAlike):

- This license allows others to distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon the work, even commercially, as long as they credit the author(s) for the original creation and license their new creations under the same terms.
- Authors retain copyright ownership of their work and grant others permission to use and redistribute it under the terms specified by the CC-BY-SA license.
- Users are required to provide proper attribution and license their derivative works under the same CC-BY-SA license.

3. CC-BY-NC (Attribution-NonCommercial):

- This license allows others to distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon the work for non-commercial purposes only, as long as they credit the author(s) for the original creation.
- Authors retain copyright ownership of their work and grant others permission to use and redistribute it for non-commercial purposes only.
- Users are required to provide proper attribution to the original author(s) and may not use the work for commercial purposes without additional permissions.

4. Other Customized Licenses:

- The Journal of Premier Research may offer authors the flexibility to customize licensing agreements based on their preferences and goals. This may include variations of Creative Commons licenses or other proprietary licenses tailored to specific requirements.
- Authors should carefully review and select the appropriate licensing option that aligns with their intentions for sharing and disseminating their work.

In addition to specifying the type of Creative Commons license used, the Journal of Premier Research provides authors with information on their rights and permissions regarding their published work. Authors retain copyright ownership of their manuscripts and grant the journal a non-exclusive license to publish, distribute, and disseminate their work. Authors are responsible for ensuring that their submissions comply with copyright laws and regulations, including obtaining necessary permissions for any third-party content included in their manuscripts. The Journal of Premier Research respects authors' rights and supports their efforts to share their research openly and contribute to the advancement of knowledge in the field of premier research.